President inaugurates road in southern Kandahar province

The president has inaugurated a road in the southern Kandahar province, with the road being an under-construction project.

The road inaugurated yesterday was 16.4 kilometers long and 69.2 meters wide. It was built at a cost of 2.8 billion Afghanis from the government's development budget.

The road would be increased with other provinces, the security officials said.

Both sides also discussed the importance of their role in the political and military processes.

They agreed that the political stability of the country's role in Afghanistan would end with the delegation and Taliban negotiators.

Dialogue set to be held on 7 – 8 July by joint initiative of Qatar and Germany in Doha.

For Afghan women with Olympic dreams, a long, hard road to the Games

In her gym, news of suicide attacks runs like an electric current. "They will definitely be a disadvantage," said Sadia Bromand, 19, a former Olympic boxer. "But I can't give up."

When she feels discouraged, she looks at the tattoos etched on her arms. "My life has been much more challenging than the Olympic dreams," she said. "But I have a realistic shot at the Games."

Then she wraps her hands and begins to box. In a run-down gym tucked behind a market, the Taliban have met for several talks between the Taliban and political leaders. "Women are a part of the solution," said Rahimi. "In some countries, women have been able to represent their country in the Olympics."

Sharif, in the country's north, said this far in part because she has a sense of responsibility. "We need to cover our heads and dress modestly," she said. "We need to play."]"

The IOC banned Afghan athletes from wearing the Afghan flag until three months before the Games. "They will definitely be an advantage," said Sharif. "Women in Iran have been able to represent their country in the Olympics."
